AIM OF THE CONGRESS

In recent years, there has been an increase in patients with celiac disease and gluten-related disorders. Concurrently, there has been a stream of scientific publications that have radically changed both the diagnostic and control phases of these types of conditions.

For these reasons, there is a strong demand for technical and specific updates regarding these disorders and their management from the various specialists involved. The purpose of this conference is to provide an update on the latest scientific advancements and provide the knowledge necessary for integrating them into clinical practice.
